

Why PLC Right? Why Now?

Culture shift and shared purpose

Why this meeting matters

This isn't about adding work — it's about making collaboration meaningful and focused on student learning. Doing PLC well asks more of us than teaching alone, and it's fair to feel that; but it's the work that raises how much every student learns and sharpens our craft. Meeting 1 builds the shared why that the rest of the year rests on.

Meeting 1 · Wednesday, August 12, 2026 · 45 minutes
Focus	Why are we changing how PLTs work?
Leave with	A shared understanding of why the PLC process matters — named as your team's shift: “less on _____, and more on _____.”

Agenda — step by step

Time	What the team does
0–5 min	Frame the year. Name the shift out loud: PLT Lite → PLC Right — this is about student learning, not more meetings.
5–15 min	Read “Cultural Shifts” together. Highlight where your team is now and circle the shifts you're moving toward.
15–30 min	Review the four critical questions and connect them to student learning, using the Alignment sheet (big ideas → pillars → questions).
30–40 min	Team reflection. Where are we already strong? Where are we still operating as PLT Lite?
40–45 min	Name the shift. Ground the why in one sentence: “This year, our PLT will focus less on _____ and more on _____.” It's your shared understanding, not a formal commitment.

Two reproducibles support this meeting: Cultural Shifts in a PLC, and the Big Ideas / Pillars / Questions alignment.

Where we're going next → Meeting 2

Meeting 2 sets up how your team works — assigning roles, writing specific norms, and agreeing how you'll hold each other accountable, using three short worksheets that lead into each other.
