

Full Cycle Reflection and Next Steps

Celebrating completion and preparing for the next cycle.

Why this meeting matters

Culture changes when teams pause to recognize what they learned and how their practice changed. This meeting helps teams see that PLC is not a meeting structure. It is a continuous improvement process.

Close the loop on the team, too. Two tools give the honest picture: the Critical Issues self-assessment is a comprehensive read on how far the team's PLC practice has matured across the whole year — the questions that would have been premature in September now have real answers. And the final Collaborative Team Rubric re-score, set beside the Meeting 3 baseline and the mid-year check, lets the team see — in specific, observable terms — how far it has come.

Meeting 18 · Wednesday, May 19, 2027 · 45 minutes

Focus	What did we learn, and what will we do differently next time?
Leave with	Completed team reflection and next-cycle recommendation.

Agenda — step by step

Time	What the team does
0–8 min	Retrace the cycle. Walk from essential standard all the way to reassessment.
8–20 min	Reflect as a team. Use the Learning Team Quarterly Reflection, then complete the Critical Issues self-assessment — a comprehensive read on how far your PLC practice has come. The questions that were premature in September now have real answers.
20–28 min	Re-score your teamwork. Take the Collaborative Team Rubric one final time and set it beside your Meeting 3 baseline and mid-year check. Name how far the team has come — in specific, observable terms. This is the growth you built all year.
28–36 min	Name the takeaways. What worked, what was hard, and what to change next year.
36–41 min	Pick one thing to strengthen. Choose one PLC practice to grow in your next cycle.
41–46 min	Celebrate. You completed an authentic cycle. Acknowledge it together.

You've completed the cycle

You finished a full, authentic PLC learning cycle — clarity, common assessment, response, and reflection. Next year you run it again, stronger, with the habits this year built.
